Tor, ultimate protection for average users
Tor is free software for enabling anonymous communication. The name is derived from an acronym for the original software project name "The Onion Router".Tor directs Internet traffic through a free, worldwide, volunteer overlay network consisting of more than seven thousand relaysto conceal a users location and usage from anyone conducting network surveillance or traffic analysis. Using Tor makes it more difficult to trace Internet activity to the user: this includes "visits to Web sites, online posts, instant messages, and other communication forms".Tor is intended use is to protect the personal privacy of its users, as well as their freedom and ability to conduct confidential communication by keeping their Internet activities from being monitored.
Tails (OS)
Tails or The Amnesic Incognito Live System is a security-focused Debian-based Linux distribution. Tails is a live operating system that you can start on almost any computer from a USB stick or a DVD. It aims at preserving your privacy and anonymity, and helps you to use the Internet anonymously and circumvent censorship; All connections to the Internet are forced to go through the Tor network, leave no trace on the computer you are using unless you ask it explicitly. And of course use state-of-the-art cryptographic tools to encrypt your files, emails and instant messaging. Important tool they used in their work with National Security Agency whistleblower Edward Snowden. Tails received funding from the Mozilla, company behind Firefox browser.

Julian Assange
Chelsea Manning
Chelsea Elizabeth Manning (born Bradley Edward Manning) is an American activist, whistleblower, and 2018 Senate candidate. She is a former United States Army soldier who was convicted by court-martial in July 2013 of violations of the Espionage Act and other offenses, after disclosing to WikiLeaks nearly 750,000 classified, or unclassified but sensitive, military and diplomatic documents, and was imprisoned between 2010 and 2017.Assigned in 2009 to an Army unit in Iraq as an intelligence analyst, Manning had access to classified databases. In early 2010, she leaked classified information to WikiLeaks and confided this to Adrian Lamo(who died in 2018), an online acquaintance. Lamo indirectly informed the Armys Criminal Investigation Command, and Manning was arrested in May that same year.The material included videos of the July 12, 2007, Baghdad airstrike, and the 2009 Granai airstrike in Afghanistan; 251.287 U.S. diplomatic cables; and 482.832 Army reports that came to be known as the "Iraq War Logs" and "Afghan War Diary". The material was published by WikiLeaks and its media partners between April 2010 and April 2011.

Anonymous
Anon is a non-profit organization established to improve the privacy . The anization was founded by a team of hacktivist adn privacy activists who for years has been engaged in exposing dark crimes of big NETcompanies like Google, Microsoft, Amazon and intelligence agencies like NSA, CIA, Mi5, Mossad and others The focus of our work is revealing who,how and why is spying on all levels of society. Our goal is to help readers to better understand data breach, search manipulation, privacy invasion affect our lives. Moreover, Anon is building an online database of documents, which is a valuable resource for journalists and the public.Anon is involved in cross-border research projects. We are interested to help other media to develop their capacity for investigative journalism.So here it is 5 reason why privacy matters!
1. Limit on Power
Privacy is a limit on government power, as well as the power of private sector companies.The more someone knows about us, the more power they can have over us. Personal data is

1. Limit on Power
Privacy is a limit on government power, as well as the power of private sector companies.The more someone knows about us, the more power they can have over us. Personal data is used to make very important decisions in our lives. Personal data can be used to affect our reputations; and it can be used to influence our decisions and shape our behavior. It can be used as a tool to exercise control over us. And in the wrong hands, personal data can be used to cause us great harm.
2. Respect for Individuals Privacy is about respecting individuals. If a person has a reasonable desire to keep something private, it is disrespectful to ignore that person's wishes without a compelling reason to do so. Of course, the desire for privacy can conflict with important values, so privacy may not always win out in the balance. Sometimes people's desires for privacy are just brushed aside because of a view that the harm in doing so is trivial. Even if this doesn't cause major injury, it demonstrates a lack of respect for that person. In a sense it is saying: "I care about my interests, but I don't care about yours."
3. Reputation Management
Privacy enables people to manage their reputations. How we are judged by others affects our opportunities, friendships, and overall well-being. Although we can't have complete control over our reputations, we must have some ability to protect our reputations from being unfairly harmed. Protecting reputation depends on protecting against not only falsehoods but also certain truths. Knowing private details about people's lives doesn't necessarily lead to more accurate judgment about people. People judge badly, they judge in haste, they judge out of context, they judge without hearing the whole story, and they judge with hypocrisy. Privacy helps people protect themselves from these troublesome judgments.

4. Maintaining Appropriate Social Boundaries
People establish boundaries from others in society. These boundaries are both physical and informational. We need places of solitude to retreat to, places where we are free of the gaze of others in order to relax and feel at ease. We also establish informational boundaries, and we have an elaborate set of these boundaries for the many different relationships we have. Privacy helps people manage these boundaries. Breaches of these boundaries can create awkward social situations and damage our relationships. Privacy is also helpful to reduce the social friction we encounter in life. Most people don't want everybody to know everything about them – hence the phrase "none of your business." And sometimes we don't want to know everything about other people — hence the phrase "too much information."
5. Trust
In relationships, whether personal, professional, governmental, or commercial, we depend upon trusting the other party. Breaches of confidentiality are breaches of that trust. In professional relationships such as our relationships with doctors and lawyers, this trust is key to maintaining candor in the relationship. Likewise, we trust other people we interact with as well as the companies we do business with. When trust is breached in one relationship, that could make us more reluctant to trust in other relationships.

Marko Scekic, the author
College student from Belgrade Serbia, age 20.Interested in cars, computer law, privacy activist, coding, computer hardware.Finished primary and middle school Kosta Abrasevic in my neighborhood and started Peta Ekonomska | high school for economics, finnished high schol with ease and then started College Visoka ICT. Made this website for school project, but privacy is important in my life I , personaly I use TOR every day but it is slow due to encryption, so my "daily driver" is Firefox with uBlock, HTTPS Everywhere, Decentraleyes and Cookie AuotDelete extension for security and ultimate privacy.Even though I use Android phone,hower it uses open-source operating system so no back doors for NSA Google or other goverment agency. Google and all his products and services is ditched, DuckDuckGo handles my search pretty well but in recent couple days started using Start Page for his "Google" type of search result.Gmail is used only for school purposes only. About my school, Visoka ICT skola based in Belgrade, Serbia.

<h2>Privacy is our right</h2>

Over the last 16 months, as I've debated this issue around the world, every single time somebody has said to me, "I don't really worry about invasions of privacy because I don't have anything to hide." I always say the same thing to them. I get out a pen, I write down my email address. I say, "Here's my email address. What I want you to do when you get home is email me the passwords to all of your email accounts, not just the nice, respectable work one in your name, but all of them, because I want to be able to just troll through what it is you're doing online, read what I want to read and publish whatever I find interesting.
After all, if you're not a bad person, if you're doing nothing wrong, you should have nothing to hide." Not a single person has taken me up on that offer. censorship; All connections to the Internet are forced to go through the Tor network, leave no trace on the computer you are using unless you ask it explicitly. And of course use state-of-the-art cryptographic tools to encrypt your files, emails and instant messaging. Important tool they used in their work

'Privacy is a limit on government power, as well as the power of private sector companies.The more someone knows about us, the more power they can have over us.
Personal data is used to make very important decisions in our lives. Personal data can be used to affect our reputations; and it can be used to influence our decisions and shape our behavior. It can be used as a tool to exercise control over us. And in the wrong hands, personal data can be used to cause us great harm.',
'Privacy is about respecting individuals. If a person has a reasonable desire to keep something private, it is disrespectful to ignore that person's wishes without a compelling reason to do so. Of course, the desire for privacy can conflict with important values, so privacy may not always win out in the balance.
Sometimes people's desires for privacy are just brushed aside because of a view that the harm in doing so is trivial. Even if this doesn't cause major injury, it demonstrates a lack of respect for that person. In a sense it is saying: "I care about my interests, but I don't care about yours."', 'Privacy enables people to manage their reputations. How we are judged by others affects our opportunities, friendships, and overall well-being. Although we can't have complete control over our reputations, we must have some ability to protect our reputations from being unfairly harmed. Protecting reputation depends on protecting against not only falsehoods but also certain truths. Knowing private details about people's lives doesn't necessarily lead to more accurate judgment about people. People judge badly, they judge in haste, they judge out of context, they judge without hearing the whole story, and they judge with hypocrisy. Privacy helps people protect themselves from these troublesome judgments.',

'People establish boundaries from others in society. These boundaries are both physical and informational. We need places of solitude to retreat to, places where we are free of the gaze of others in order to relax and feel at ease. We also establish informational boundaries, and we have an elaborate set of these boundaries for the many different relationships we have. Privacy helps people manage these boundaries. Breaches of these boundaries can create awkward social situations and damage our relationships. Privacy is also helpful to reduce the social friction we encounter in life. Most people don't want everybody to know everything about them – hence the phrase "none of your business." And sometimes we don't want to know everything about other people – hence the phrase "too much information."',
'In relationships, whether personal, professional, governmental, or commercial, we depend upon trusting the other party. Breaches of confidentiality are breaches of that trust. In professional relationships such as our relationships with doctors and lawyers, this trust is key to maintaining candor in the relationship. Likewise, we trust other people we interact with as well as the companies we do business with. When trust is breached in one relationship, that could make us more reluctant to trust in other relationships.'
